

An early, if not the earliest, reference in my published writings to (what I eventually came to speak of as) the two levels of living understandingly is in the Preface to the first edition of The Reality of God and Other Essays, where I speak of "the two different levels—of our existence itself, and of our reflection on it—at which the problem of God actually arises" (x).