

God the Creator or sole primal source of all things makes anything that becomes actual possible. Although anything that becomes actual is, in its way, also a creator and a source of some other things, whereby they become possible, God is the Creator or sole primal source, because God alone is the source of all things, and any other source likewise has God as its only primal source.

God the Consummator or sole final end of all things makes anything that becomes actual significant. Although anything that becomes actual is, in its way, also a consummator and an end of some other things, whereby they become significant, God is the Consummator or sole final end, because God alone is the end of all things, and any other end likewise has God as its only final end.

15 February 2001