

God wills that the law be fulfilled, demanding that a human being exist in faith in God and live accordingly, obeying God's commandment to love and thereby fulfilling all of the other commandments.

This means that whenever a human being wills to exist in faith in God and to live accordingly, God is pleased and glorified.

But God does not love a human being because, or only if, she or he wills so to exist in faith and to live accordingly. On the contrary, God loves a human being solely and simply because God is God, because it is God's very nature thus to love; and in so doing, God makes possible and, in this sense, gives, the very existence in faith and living accordingly that God demands in willing that the law be fulfilled.

n.d.; rev. 7 February 2010