

If Luther's analysis of sin is accurate, and if the one thing the natural woman or man is unable to do is to let God be God, to give God the glory, to commit her or his salvation utterly and completely to God, then the gospel, which demands dying to just such an attitude, demands from the natural woman or man exactly what the law, specifically the First Commandment, demands from her or him.

Spring 1994