

Whenever one holds that a particular interpretation of the Christian witness in the past is the sole adequate interpretation, one also allows the past situation in whose terms the interpretation was cast to become lord over the Christian witness, instead of remaining always only its servant, by providing terms to be used in interpreting that witness in and for that particular situation.

26 May 1997