

Epigraph

"The many become one, and are increased by one. . . . Also, there are two senses of the one—namely, the sense of the one which is all, and the sense of the one among the many. . . . We are, each of us, one among others; and all of us are embraced in the unity of the whole."

Alfred North Whitehead

"[M]etaphysics is essentially a question of the logical structure of concepts [T]he basic decisions are not as to metaphors, but as to logical structure. What depends upon what, what includes what, what is necessary to or contingent upon what?"

Charles Hartshorne
