

Question: If transcendental metaphysics in the broad sense consists in explicating and arguing for existentials as well as transcendentals; and if existentials are rightly classified as a type of abstracts (= properties = objects), should they not be specifically mentioned as such, either along with transcendentals or along with categories, genera, and species?

But if so, with which? And why?

27 September 2004