

Any religion as such explicitly formulates some understanding of the meaning of ultimate reality for us and thus some understanding of ourselves in relation to ultimate reality. In doing so, it claims implicitly or explicitly a decisive authority in that it claims to re-present truly what is always already presented implicitly in our existence as such.

rev. 13 April 2001