INTRODUCING NEW FACULTY

Ferdi Eruysak, Mathematics and Computer Science

Ferdi Eruysak received a Ph.D. in Management Information Systems from the University of Illinois at Chicago. He joined Drew in 2019, after teaching at Texas A&M University for four years. His research interest is economics of information systems with a focus on the implications of big data and business intelligence. His research is interdisciplinary and spans information systems, marketing, and economics. He likes soccer, traveling, and tech gadgets.

Adijat Mustapha, Psychology

Adijat Mustapha is a Visiting Assistant Professor in Psychology. She graduated from Drew in the not- too- distant past where she double majored in Psychology and French. Since leaving Drew, she earned her Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology from the University of Kansas, where she also earned a graduate certificate in Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies. She has worked as a Psychologist in an Assessment and Evaluation Center, where she completed biopsychosocial evaluations for a diverse, urban population of children, adolescents, and adults. In her return to Drew, she plans to use the scientist-practitioner model by integrating clinical practice, teaching and clinical research. As a generalist psychologist with an integrative orientation, she will also implement interventions from various theories and evidence-based therapies. She looks forward to bringing all she has experienced and learned since leaving to a new generation of Drew students.

Gerard Pinto, Economics and Business

Gerard Pinto - The Economics and Business Department is very happy to introduce their newest member- Gerard Pinto. He recently received his PhD in 2019 from University of South Carolina's Darla Moore School of Business. Originally from Mumbai, he worked there in investment banking after getting his MBA in 2011. In his PhD dissertation, he examined issues related to financing decisions by firms. In particular, he evaluated the role of financial constraints in the IPO decision, and the associated underpricing of their stock. Here at Drew, Gerard will be teaching in both the new Masters in Finance program, and also the undergraduate programs in the dept. In his spare time, Gerard likes to go hiking, traveling and exploring local museums.

Jason Roberts, Anthropology

Jason Roberts is an environmental anthropologist who works on issues related to logging, agricultural development, and climate change on New Hanover Island, Papua New Guinea. He received his doctoral degree from the University of Texas at San Antonio. He previously studied anthropology and forestry at North Carolina State University and joins us at Drew after recently teaching at UT-San Antonio.

Ellie Small, Mathematics and Computer Science

Ellie Small received a BSc degree in Mathematics with Statistics and Computer Science from the University of London, Birkbeck College. She earned her PhD in Statistics from Rutgers University, New Brunswick, in 2019, and joined the Department of Mathematics and Computer Science at Drew University that same year. Dr. Small has taught statistics and mathematics at Centenary University in Hackettstown for 6 years. She specializes in data science and has completed research papers in networks and text mining. In her spare time she enjoys any type of dance, and goes ballroom dancing with her husband whenever the opportunity presents itself.

Phoebe Tang, Political Science

and International Relations Phoebe Tang joins the Department of Political Science & International Relations as a visiting assistant professor this fall. She received her PhD from the University of Southern California in 2018. Her areas of interests are state-society relations and political participation in non-democracies. Her recent research projects are concerned with the effects of different forms of environmental social contention - such as protests, litigation, or their combination - on environmental decision-making of local governments in China. She will be teaching Comparative Politics, Chinese Politics, and Authoritarianism this semester. Before joining Drew in 2019, she taught at Loyola Marymount University in Los Angeles.

Merel Visse, Medical Humanities

Merel Visse joins us as the Director of Medical Humanities and Associate Teaching Professor of Health Studies. She comes to us from the University of Humanistic Studies, The Netherlands, where she was a professor in Care Ethics and Policy. Merel has a masters degree from Erasmus University Rotterdam, in Health Care Administration and a PhD from the School of Public Health, Amsterdam University Medical Center. She is co-coordinator of the International Care Ethics Research Consortium (www.care-ethics.org).

Andrea Woodka, Chemistry

Andrea Woodka - The Chemistry Department is thrilled to welcome and introduce Dr. Andrea Woodka. Andrea received her training in chemical engineering, including a Bachelor of Science from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, as well as a Master of Science and Ph. D. from the University of Southern California. She then was an NRC Postdoctoral fellow at the National Institute for Standards and Technology (NIST). Andrea comes to Drew after having taught chemistry and chemical engineering at the United States Military Academy at West Point. Additionally, she both taught in and led a multidisciplinary team in developing and implementing an introductory science program at the United States Military Academy Preparatory School. This semester, Andrea is teaching in the first year chemistry curriculum with future assignments in the physical chemistry and environmental science curricula. Although Andrea is new to teaching at Drew, she is very familiar with the campus, having played recreational soccer at the Drew athletic facilities. You may also recognize her as the person leading the bike caravan across campus as she drops of and picks up her children from Oasis Camp. Welcome Andrea.

The Future of Learning

The world has changed drastically since the 19th century when modern higher education was invented for the era of the telegraph and the Model T. How can higher education reinvent itself, now, to prepare students for the complicated world they have inherited? In this talk, Cathy N. Davidson, renowned educator and scholar of technology and cognition, challenges us all to invent the future of learning together. She looks back at the history of higher education and the beginning of academic professionalization, analyzes how the digital age has altered the mission and function of higher education, and then ends with practical suggestions for ways professors can transform the classroom experience for maximum participation, creativity and engagement.

Davidson asks what if the classroom were structured as a training ground for life beyond school? What if the classroom were structured for asking tough questions and for addressing problems without answers? What if classrooms were structured for navigating technology and new publics? And, most important, what if the classroom were structured for workforce readiness and for world readiness? In The Future of Learning, Davidson challenges faculty, students, staff and community members to think together about these crucial questions for the future of our society.

Cathy N. Davidson is a leading innovator in the areas of institutional change, professional development and personal health, success and performance in the digital age. A distinguished scholar of the history of technology, she is the author of 20 books on technology, education, and cognitive neuroscience. Her appearance at Drew is generously supported by the endowment for the Merrill Maguire Skaggs Lecture and is presented as part of the Drew Forum speaker series.

* Faculty may purchase one ticket in person at the Shakespeare Theatre of New Jersey box office with a valid Drew University ID. Please note, reduced tickets must be paid for in cash.
